Lowndes

Paternity & Unmarried Parents

What if we have a child together but aren't married?

Unmarried parents often need the same help as divorcing parents in setting up a parenting plan, timesharing, and child support for their child. In some cases, they also need to legally establish paternity.

A court ordered Parenting Plan gives both parents clear, enforceable rights and responsibilities, and gives the child stability. That holds whether the parents agree on everything or need help resolving their differences. As children grow and circumstances change, we can also help parents modify an existing parenting plan or support arrangement.

Our attorneys represent both mothers and fathers in these matters. We handle every case with discretion and respect, and we keep your child's best interests at the center of it.

Learn more about parenting plans, timesharing and child support, or about modifying and enforcing existing arrangements.

Contact

For questions about your family law matter, contact our Family & Marital Law team.

Key Contacts

Terry C. Young

Derren K. Ciaglia

Crystal E. Buit

Related Professionals

Terry C. Young

Derren K. Ciaglia

Crystal E. Buit

Haley C. Davis

Sean Klein

Chelsea A. Miller

Bradley W. Rossway

Krista Runte

Related Expertise

Alimony & Spousal Support

Cohabitation Agreements

Collaborative Divorce

Complex & High Net-Worth Divorce

Divorce

Family & Marital Law

Parenting Plans, Timesharing & Child Support

Post-Divorce Modifications & Enforcement

Prenuptial & Postnuptial Agreements

Property Division & Equitable Distribution