Jennifer Fisher is an attorney in the firm's Litigation Department, where she focuses her practice on property tax, eminent domain, and real estate litigation, including landlord-tenant disputes. Drawing on her experience representing businesses and individuals in a broad range of commercial disputes, she brings a strong foundation in dispute resolution and strategic advocacy to matters involving property rights, valuation issues and other real estate-related conflicts.

Prior to joining the firm, Jennifer defended Fortune 100 companies in litigation throughout Florida and the Southeastern United States. Her experience includes restrictive covenant enforcement, complex product liability disputes, consumer arbitration, and other business-related conflicts. She also advised clients on contract drafting and review, helping them navigate legal and operational challenges with practical, business-minded counsel.

Before becoming an attorney, Jennifer served as a police officer with the Durham Police Department in North Carolina. Her law enforcement background sharpened her investigative skills, attention to detail, and ability to assess complex factual situations, qualities that continue to inform her approach to client advocacy and problem-solving.

Jennifer earned her law degree, summa cum laude, from Florida A&M University College of Law, graduating first in her class and receiving nine book awards. She was also recognized by Florida's Fifth District Court of Appeal as one of the top scorers on The Florida Bar examination and was invited by the chief judge to deliver the induction address for new attorneys in May 2022. She earned her undergraduate degree in criminology, summa cum laude, from North Carolina State University, with minors in forensic science and psychology.
