Lowndes attorney Lauren Beames co-authored an article in the William & Mary Environmental Law & Policy Review, exploring how four international biodiversity conventions emphasize biodiversity conservation's role in reducing zoonotic disease risks, particularly during the COVID-19 pandemic.

The article, titled "The Initial Response of Biodiversity Conventions to the COVID-19 Pandemic," is a collaboration between Beames, Professor Royal C. Gardner of Stetson University College of Law, and Katherine Pratt, also of Stetson Law.

A graduate of Stetson Law, Beames is an associate in the firm's Litigation Department, where she focuses her practice in the areas of commercial, business, and real estate litigation.
